GREAT BRITAIN MOBILIZING HER FORCES

PREPARATIONS FOR ACTION IN CHINA MOVING RAPIDLY

Reserves Are Called and Cruiser Squadron of Mediterranean Fleet Is Already Enroute To Trouble Zone—Guards Protect Business Sections of Shanghai With the Tensity At Fever Pitch—Everywhere Foreigners Are Preparing To Defend Themselves.

Great Britain's preparations for military action in China have taken on a grave aspect.

The war office announced certain sections of the army reserve will be called to service.

Leave for all ranks has been restricted, and cancelled entirely in some regiments.

Four additional battalions of troops have been placed under orders to proceed to China. One thousand marines will sail on Tuesday for China.

Unofficial reports state that Indian troops have been ordered to Chinese service.

The war office announcement with regard to reports that battalions ordered be brought up to the required strength for colonial service by the inclusion of certain men from section A of the army reserve. This section of the reserve consists of men who have accepted liability to return to service under the colors in circumstances which do not render a general mobilization necessary.

The first battalion of the Middlesex regiment was placed under orders to stand by for orders to proceed to China.

With the first cruiser squadron of the Mediterranean fleet already under way for China, Great Britain's naval and military preparations for trouble in China have become ominous.

The foreign office continues to explain that the measures taken are entirely precautionary and do not contemplate any action against China unless there are overt acts against British citizens or property.

In China mounted machine guns, armored car patrols and armed guards protect the principal business sections of Shanghai, with the tensity at a fever pitch.

All foreign police forces are under the strictest orders not to use their arms except in the last extreme. Every effort is being made to prevent bloodshed, which will undoubtedly lead to serious clashes.

Nanking road, the Fifth avenue of Shanghai, is filled with debris and more than 60 Chinese are suffering from injuries as the result of an outburst Saturday which might easily have led to serious conflict.

Chinese street car workers who have been on a strike celebrated their return in so disorderly a manner that the celebration took on the aspect of a riot rather than a celebration. Street cars were seized by the demonstrators and they flooded into the principal business streets.

Further tension is caused by private advices from Hankow that the situation there is growing more acute and that the negotiations between the British and Cantonese have not met with any success.

American and British warships are on the alert and everywhere one finds the foreigners prepared to defend themselves.

Find $2,000,000 "Rose" Diamond; Arrest Two

Paris.—The famous rose diamond, known as the "Grand Conde," stolen from the gem tower in the chateau of the Duc d'Aumale in Chantilly early in October, has been recovered.

The famous gem was found in a valise, the stone wrapped carefully in cotton. Two of the alleged thieves, Leon Kaulfer and Emile Souther, who crossed a flooded moat and climbed into the gem tower on a ladder, were arrested and are reported to have confessed.

Two fences, who sold a fortune in smaller jewels which also were stolen, were arrested. Other accomplices are sought. The thieves got only 30,000 francs (about $1,200). They threw settings, some of which were of great value, into the Seine and sold the stones to unsuspecting reputable jewelers.

The mystery was cleared because Kaulfer talked too much. One of his lapses from caution was promptly reported to the police. He was shadowed for several weeks, and finally connected with the robbery and arrested.

Andrew Carruthers of Waukegan, was branded on the back with a flat-iron in the hands of his wife when he failed to get up at her call, and he had her arrested.

Illiteracy Increasing; Paris Lays It to War

Paris.—A little known form of the war damage suffered by France is revealed in army figures which show an increasing number of illiterates among recruits. In 1921, of the men called to the colors, 6,713 were unable to read or write, while 13,058 confessed themselves illiterate in 1924.

Figures for only a part of 1925 are available, but they show an augmentation in the condition, which is ascribed to the disorganization in schooling during the war.

GENE GORDON TO ENTERTAIN ON WEDNESDAY

Program of Magic, Mystery and Laughter at the High School Auditorium.

Under the auspices of the senior class of Circleville high school, Gene Gordon, the well known international entertainer will present a full program of magic, mystery, laughter and ventriloquism, the latter with Jerry, "the talking doll," next Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. There will also be a special matinee after school of the same day for the high and grade children. Both will be given in the high school auditorium.

Mr. Gordon is famous both for the presentation of famous illusions such as Houdini's needle swallowing trick and dozens of others, and his ability to provoke laugh after laugh from his audience.

He defines a laugh as 'an action consisting chiefly of spasmodic expulsions of breath, with jerky, inarticulate sounds, accompanied by agitation of the facial muscles, provoked generally by what strikes the mind as humorously contradictory or mirthful exciting.'

The prices for the special performance have been made low as for any which Mr. Gordon has performed and the proceeds of the performance will be placed in a fund for the senior class memorial in the form of a section of bleachers on the high school athletic field.

Tickets are on sale by the students.

SEA TRAGEDY

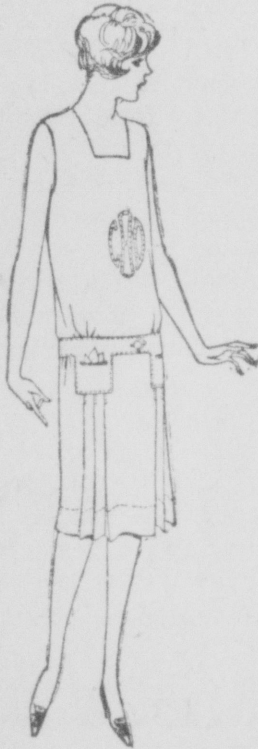

Craft John Tracy Missing Ten Days Is Lost With Crew of Twenty-seven.

Boston, Jan. 21.—Fears that the steamer John Tracy had foundered off Cape Cod in the blizzard of Jan. 11, changed to grim certainty today when the nameplate of the vessel, parts of her hatch covers and an empty lifeboat were picked up near Georges Shoal, off the Cape Cod coast. The steamer carried a crew of 27 men.

The Tracy was bound from Norfolk to Boston with coal and was last seen on the forenoon of Jan. 11, fighting the gale between Pollock Rip lighthouse and the tip of Cape Cod.

Lieutenant Commander McNeil, commanding the destroyer Burroughs, reported tonight by radio that he had picked up two heavy sections of the plank hatch covers of the vessel and her name board. The latter was a part of the pilot house of the steamer, on which her name was painted.

Joe Finally Saw
the Point

By H. IRVING KING

JOSEPH SCARBOROUGH was rather of the opinion that Minerva Fairbanks had "thrown him down," but he was not quite sure. He had known her, it seemed to him, for always; and for some time he had been taking it for granted that he should some day ask her to be his wife—and she would accept. But then came that dashing Martin Van Beekman around and Joe began to think that he had taken too much for granted.

Whatever a "man of the world" is Van Beekman was that. He had a most engaging personality, talked fluently and dressed perfectly. Joe, on the other hand, while refreshingly wholesome, was not much of a conversationalist, and sartorially left much to be desired. Van Beekman had become a constant visitor at the Fairbanks home, and the girls—Minerva and her younger sister Susan—found him, as Sue expressed it, "perfectly fascinating." When Joe happened to be calling at the same time Van Beekman was, it was as much as he could do to get in a word edgewise; and when he did, his best thought-out remark seemed to act as a damper on the company. Minnie, after one of these attempts of Joe's, would look at him doubtfully for a moment and then resume her repartee of "wit, wisdom and allegory" with Van Beekman.

Joe hoped at first that it was sister Sue that Van Beekman admired. But Minnie appeared to be much fonder of Van Beekman's society than her sister. Joe ventured to expostulate. In a blundering way, with Minerva; only to be told that she did not know what right he had to criticize or control her actions, ending with: "Why, Joe, you talk as if you and I were engaged."

That was Joe's opportunity, but he did not seize it, and it was two hours after that he thought of what he ought to have said. When he did think of it he resolved to go to Minnie and have a "straight-out talk" with her. But when he arrived at the Fairbanks home that everlasting Van Beekman was there, and he went away leaving unsaid what he had come to say. He would keep away from the Fairbanks house and "let 'em go it," he thought. "Who knew anything about that Van Beekman fellow? He was an adventurer—Joe was willing to bet on it—and was trying to capture an heiress."

Joe kept to his resolution of abstinence for a whole week, and then called upon "the Fairbanks girls" with the usual unsatisfactory results. Susan talked to him and tried to cheer him up, but Minerva kept chatting away with Van Beekman, only giving Joe a curious look now and then, which he could not in the least understand the import of, and once saying: "Joe, why don't you talk? What's the matter with you lately?"

"Nothing," said Joe, and presently took his leave.

Now Minerva and Susan Fairbanks were orphans. They had no near relations and their father had left them both very well off. Joe felt like saying to Van Beekman: "If it's merely a fortune you are after, why don't you take Sue and let my Minnie alone?" But it wouldn't make any difference if I did, thought Joe. Minnie is so much the prettier. As a matter of fact she was nowhere near as good looking as Susan—but in Joe's eyes she was far superior.

Things dragged along in this manner for some time. Joe began to lose weight. "He don't eat enough to keep a canary alive," his fond mother declared. Then one day, to his great surprise, Van Beekman called upon Joe at the office of the little yarn mill which Joe had inherited from his father and the business of which he was rapidly extending. Quite an important person was Joe in the community—financially. He received Van Beekman rather coldly and asked what he could do for him.

"You probably have noticed," said the suave Van Beekman, "my attentions to the beautiful Miss Fairbanks."

"I have," glowered Joe. "I have, and allow me to tell you that I have not seen them with pleasure. Who are you, sir, to come into this community and try to captivate the best and prettiest girl in town? What are your credentials?"

"That is just what I came to show you," replied Van Beekman. "You may look me up in Bradstreet's, and here are letters, documents and references which I think will satisfy you."

Joe looked at the documents and he looked at Bradstreet's. "Humph," said he, "seems to be all right. But what have I got to do with it?"

"Why," returned Van Beekman, "when I told Miss Fairbanks that her sister Susan and myself had come to an understanding, and requested her consent to our marriage, as head of the family, she said that she and you had been long engaged and were soon to be married and, therefore, as her husband, you would be the real head of the family, and were the one to be consulted."

"Oh, I see, yes, certainly, of course," gasped Joe. "Your credentials are perfectly satisfactory, sir. I congratulate you."

Then he put on his hat and went right up to see Minerva. What he said to her neither of them ever told. But they were married a month before Susan and Van Beekman were.

COW! SPEED UP!

Milk Produced by Average Cow Only Half What It Should Be

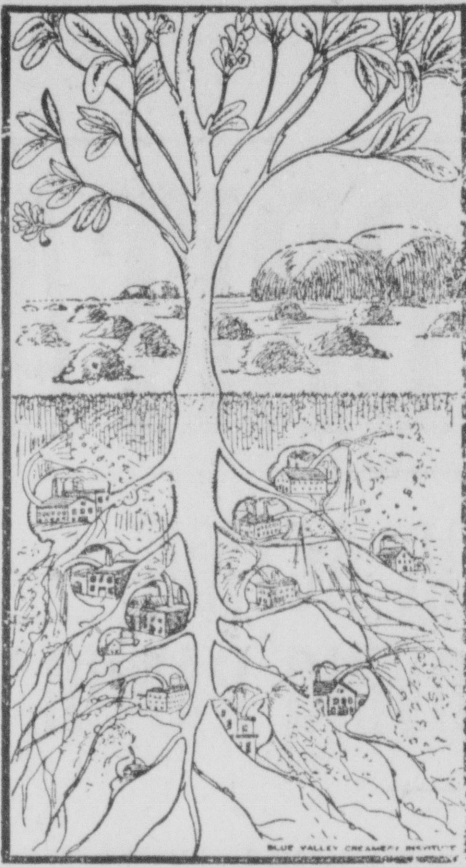

That the milk produced by the average dairy cow today in America is a little more than half of what it should be, is the startling statement made by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. This is based on records of 21,000 cows. The average production of all cows in the United States has increased from 3,434 pounds in 1909 to 4,368 in 1924, a gain of 27.2 per cent. In view of the greatly increased costs of production during the fifteen years covering this period, the gain in average production falls far short of being commensurate.

With double the present average production, easily made possible by better feeding practices, the use of pure-bred sires and careful culling, the average American dairy cow will be able to fill an 8,000-pound can, at a slight increase over present costs of production.

In order to make milk economically a cow must be fed liberally with a milk-making ration which includes legume hay such as alfalfa, soybean hay, or clover. There should be at least one acre of alfalfa for every cow in milk.

MANUFACTURING PLANT

Alfalfa Has Many Fertilizer Factories in Its Root System

With many fertilizer factories on its extensive root system, alfalfa is nature's greatest manufacturing plant, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute, a champion of alfalfa on every farm. In the course of one season's operation, these factories, present in the form of small nodules, produce on farms of average size tons of digestible nutritious food substances in the stalks, stems and leaves for all classes of farm livestock. The chief raw product of these factories is nitrogen, which it procures direct from the air and permeates the soil to considerable depths. The workers in these factories are millions of bacteria that work day and night throughout the growing season.

When alfalfa is plowed under as green manure, it supplies the largest possible amount of expensive fertilizer to the soil in a form that is available immediately as food for non-leguminous crops which can procure their nitrogen requirements only from their roots.

When fed to stock on the farm and returned to the soil as manure, there is still much nitrogen brought back to the soil by alfalfa. Even its stubble and roots, when turned under, leave considerable amounts of nitrogenous foods in the soil, succeeding crops. Alfalfa is nature's greatest manufacturing plant for building soil fertility, larger crops and greater profits.

Jackson, Jan. 21.—Charles W. Scurlock, father of ten children, has mysteriously disappeared as the climax of a stormy career as Auditor of Jackson county.

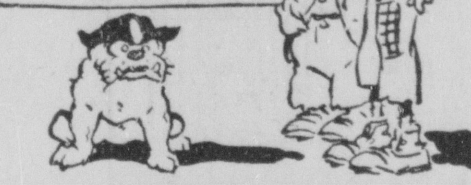

Attaches of the auditor's office said they had no idea as to his whereabouts and that they had not seen or been in communication with Scurlock since January 8. Affairs of the office are being administered by Deputy R. W. Jenkins, who was elected to take the auditorship next March.

The only clue to Scurlock's whereabouts was given in a deed filed this week transferring his property to a daughter. The deed was signed before a notary in Hamilton county.

Four other Buckeye target smashers are listed with the All America high averages for 1926. C. A. Young, the Springfield veteran, who copped the recent Grand American, takes third honors in the 4,000 and over class. Young's mark was .9617 on 8,050 targets. Roy McGregor, Springfield, takes fourth honors in the All America high average handicap roll. McGregor busted 691 out of 750 for a mark of .9218. Joe Boeckman, Dayton, is listed fifth in the handicaps with .9200. The Gem City star shot at 600 and broke 552. John R. Taylor, the well known Newark professional, leads the 3,000 and over professional target division. He averaged .9751 on 3,700 clays.

SOYBEAN SEED SHOWS VERY POOR GERMINATION

Soybean seed threshed in December from the field at the Ohio Experiment Station is showing a germination of only 54 to 96 per cent. Soybeans harvested early and dried out somewhat in the mow, stack, or well-built cocks, germinated better than this late harvested seed, which contained much moisture at harvest time and had little chance to dry before severe cold weather.

Seven varieties averaging 61 per cent germination in the tests had an average moisture content of 30 per cent. The one lot of seed germinating 96 per cent, showed only 23 per cent moisture.

The soybeans containing 30 to 35 per cent moisture were plastic and rubbery and easily pressed out of shape. Such seed, L. E. Thatcher, assistant agronomist at the Station, explained, is injured by the low temperature 6 to 10 degrees, such as occurred in December. Seed of 15 to 20 per cent moisture content will stand a much lower temperature without injury.

Freezing does not lower the feeding value of soybeans. Damp seed, however, is likely to mold upon the approach of warm weather. This may be prevented by spreading the seed in a thin layer on the barn floor and stirring occasionally to hasten drying.

Righteousness First

So I like life, and I like righteousness; if I cannot keep the two together, I will let life go and choose righteousness.—Mencius.

YOUNG MAN LOST BOTH HIS HANDS

Willard Lanum, seventeen year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lanum of near Washington C. H., who was so badly burned on Christmas night by electric wires which he had attempted to remove from across the road where they had fallen during a sleet storm, had both his hands amputated.

The operation was performed at Mt. Carmel hospital, Columbus, where the suffering boy has been undergoing treatment for some time. The right arm was removed just below the elbow and the left hand was taken off just above the wrist.

The burns on the youth's neck continue to confront the attending surgeons and specialists with a very difficult problem as the patient's voice has disappeared and the trachea or air tube leading to the lungs has only a stump remaining near the top of the breast bone and through this opening the patient receives air. However, surgeons report that the boy's neck shows some indications of healing and there is some hope given for his recovery.

During the course of the operation when it was necessary to administer an anaesthetic, this had to be done through the small opening in his neck.—Washington Record-Republican.

Pneumonia's Ravages

Pneumonia headed the list of diseases that caused the greatest number of deaths among our soldiers in the World war. More than 40,000 died from this cause. Of these, probably 25,000 resulted from the influenza-pneumonia pandemic which swept through every camp and cantonment in this country and caused thousands of deaths in the expeditionary forces.

WILL SUCCEED FRANK MAULLAR

Local Man To Be Replaced On State Utilities Commission By C. C. Thorpe.

Governor Vic Donahey, in the next few days, will send to the senate the nomination of C. C. Thorpe, Republican, to succeed Frank B. Maullar of this city on the Public Utilities Commission.

Maullar, local Republican boss, has been a member of the commission for the past six years under appointment from former Governor Harry L. Davis.

Thorpe has been recommended for the post by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers. He is in the car service division of the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington and formerly was inspector for the state utilities body.

Thorpe's name will take the place of W. H. Broughton, Columbus. Maullar's commission expires during February, it is understood. — News-Advertiser, Chillicothe.

The phrase "the breaking of the alabaster box" originated in the story of Mary Magdalene, who, tradition says, broke such a box to anoint the feet of Christ.

Some Energy Desserts For Mid-Winter

EVERY housewife, particularly the mother of a family, knows the interest aroused by a "surprise" dessert. Something unusual in appearance, even if its ingredients are well known staples, will appeal to the grown folks, as well as cause a pitch of excitement among the children.
Here are a number of dessert suggestions which should be welcomed by the housewife. They are all easy to make, for the basis of each is canned fruit. Each recipe, however, has some original touch which makes it attractive.

Peach Marshmallow Custard—In a baking dish, lay halves of canned peaches. Over them pour a custard made as follows: Beat two eggs slightly, add a quarter cup of sugar, an eighth teaspoon salt, mix well and stir in two cups of scalded milk. Cook over water, stirring constantly until the mixture thickens enough to form a layer of custard or a coating on spoon. Strain, and pour over the canned peaches. On top, place marshmallows. Bake in a moderate oven (375 F) for ten to fifteen minutes, or until set, and brown on top.

Open Face Cranberry Pie—The brilliant color of cranberries makes them most attractive in pies. Bake a crust. Put into saucepan can of cranberries, sugar to sweeten and enough water to make mixture soft enough. Dot with butter. When mixture is of right consistency and taste, pour into pie crust. Bake ten minutes in a quick oven (400 F).

Cocoanut Fruit Tarts—Any of the canned fruits may be used for this recipe and canned berries or cherries are equally good. Line patty tins with pastry. Put halves of fruit or a spoonful of fruit into each and over the fruit pour a cocoanut mixture made of a can of grated coconut, a half cup of sugar, a beaten egg, a tablespoon of melted butter, and a fourth cup of milk. Bake in a fairly hot oven (375 F) about twenty minutes.

Pineapple Upside Down Cake—
This is an unusually delicious dessert.
Drain the juice from a large can of either crushed or sliced Hawaiian pineapple. Sift two cups of flour.
Sift again with two teaspoons baking powder and a half teaspoon salt.
Cream a half cup of butter or shortening with a cup of sugar. Add yolks of two eggs, beating thoroughly, then add the flour and a half cup of milk alternately. Fold in two beaten egg whites and a teaspoon of vanilla. Melt two tablespoons of butter in a large frying pan, spread a cup of brown sugar over the pan, add the pineapple. (If you use sliced pineapple, lay the slices close together) on top of the sugar. Pour the cake batter over fruit. Bake in a moderate oven, (360 F) about forty-five minutes.
Turn upside down on a serving dish and add whipped cream and marachino cherries.

Crushed Hawaiian pineapple makes an excellent filling for a layer cake.
Drain the pineapple thoroughly and use with whipped cream as for any other short cake.

Apricot Dumplings—Press canned apricots through a sieve, making a purée. Sift together two cups of sifted flour, four teaspoons baking powder, a teaspoon salt. Rub in six tablespoons shortening. Add gradually a cup of milk, mixing with a flat knife. Turn onto a floured board and roll out in rectangular shape.
Cover top of dough with the apricot purée and roll up like a jelly roll.
Cut off slices an inch thick and lay them cut side down in a greased baking tin. Bake in a hot oven fifteen minutes. Other canned fruits may be used in this fashion. Crushed pineapple drained, is particularly well adapted to this recipe. It need not be purced.

A sauce made by puréeing fruits in this fashion is a delicious novelty to serve with rice pudding, tapioca or Bavarian cream.

Any of the canned fruits may be quickly made into the most delicious of pies. To be sure that the juice of the pie will not run when serving it, mix three tablespoons of flour with the half cup of sugar which provides additional sweetening. Sprinkle half the sugar and flour mixture on top of the lower crust, pour in the fruit or berries, and add the remainder of the sugar and flour. Dot with a tablespoon of butter. Put the top crust on, pressing edges together firmly.
Bake in a hot oven ten to fifteen minutes.

The Little Store Around The Corner

SO this was "living happily forever after!"
Mary's lips tightened as she wondered why John had chosen this particular day to ask an important customer to dinner. And nothing in the house to eat! That meant the kitchen for Mary—Mary who wanted to spend the whole day out doors!

The gloomy reverie was cut short by the entrance of Helen, Mary's elder sister, "M-m-m just like a man,"
she commented. "A home cooked meal means so much. You can't go back on John but we can have our day just the same—these are modern times. You put flowers on the table while I buy a meal and then we go, not to return until John is half way home."

Later it was a wide-eyed, eager Mary who opened the door for what looked like Santa Claus.

"I feel as though I'd been all over the world," Helen gasped as she dropped her bundles. "Around the corner I met a caravan of camels loaded with rare fruits and precious spices and the Arab told me that he had been sent with a gift for a girl named Mary who was having company for dinner. Then I saw a dog team driving down from an ice-locked land with another gift for Mary.
There was a funny little burro, too, with huge baskets on his back and behind me a boy and a girl paddling a canoe. They were garlands of flowers from their plump, brown bodies and they, too, had a package for Mary."

Helen paused to laugh at her sister's incredulous face, then indicating scattered parcels she continued:

"Believe me or not, there are the presents — luscious pineapples from Hawaii, salmon from Alaska, coffee from Brazil, fruit cake like Mother's.
Why there's a little store around the corner that has brought the world in cans right to your very door, my dear—lentils from India, olives from Spain, chop suey, curried chicken, clams, cod-fish, spaghetti, mushrooms, anchovies, goulash, beef a la mode, chicken a la king, lobster Newburg, all tucked away in tins waiting to appear on your table at a wave of that magic wand that we call a can opener."

"No, a canned dinner is not extravagant," Helen answered a question from her sister as they planned their menu. "There is no waste because each can is selected exactly the required size. And everything is ready peeled, sliced and stoned. Besides, canned foods are the very essence of nourishment because fruits are picked at the right degree of ripeness and vegetables are cooked in air tight containers, whereas yours on the stove would be merely covered allowing precious vitamins to escape.
Now, tonight, we'll have a dinner put together in twenty minutes yet it will meet all possible food requirements.
And our ingredients have all been put up fresh with no chance to become contaminated in transit."

So it was a happy hostess, fresh from her hike, who greeted John and his guest over the dinner table. And what a meal! Helen's subtle wisdom had chosen viands designed to induce contentment as well as reduce hunger. First there was a hot creamy soup, fish to repair fagged brain cells, tender green peas for tissue building, corn to supply energy, salad of Hawaiian pineapple to aid digestion, fruit cake incomparably delicious! And all prepared in less than half an hour!

Try Mary's dinner some time when you're in a hurry. The food can all be had from "your little store around the corner" and here is the menu:

Cream of corn soup
Escalloped salmon
Paradise Island Salad
Fruit cake Coffee

Cream of Corn Soup
1 can corn, 4 cups milk, 2 tablespoons butter, 1½ tablespoons flour, pepper and salt to taste. Cook milk and corn twenty minutes, thickening with flour and butter, creamed together, then add seasoning.

Escalloped Salmon
Break contents one can salmon into pieces removing oil, skin and bones.
Place in baking dish a layer of salmon, a layer of green peas and a layer of cracker crumbs seasoning to taste and alternating until salmon and one can of peas are used. Cover with cracker crumbs dotted generously with butter. Add milk to cover and bake to a golden brown.

Paradise Island Salad
Peel small tomato for each salad, without removing stem end. Cut in sixths to stem end. Press gently apart until like a water lily two-thirds open. Put tomatoes on lettuce leaves and fill centers with drained crushed Hawaiian pineapple mixed with mayonnaise dressing.

They Live on Tree Gum

How should you like to live on nothing but gum from a gum tree for a period of about six weeks? If you were in certain parts of Asia and Africa you would probably enjoy this as the natives do. This gum is from the gum arabic tree and is said to contain a goodly amount of nourishment. During the harvest season the natives eat it instead of other food.—Grit.

Find Way to Grow

Hair on Bald Mice

Taunton, England.—Bald mice have been made to grow hair in experiments designed to discover a cure for baldness among humans.

To grow hair on mice is easy, scientists explain, but the trick was to make the mice bald.

Dr. F. A. E. Crew, principal of the animal breeding institute of the Edinburgh university, discovered that mice may be made to shed their coats by extracting certain gland substances.

Doctor Crew also says that by extracting a substance from normal mice and grafting it on the bald ones, he has been able to promote the growth of the coat again completely or partially, according to the amount applied.

The experiments are being continued with a view of ascertaining if human baldness may not be due to the same glandular deficiency, and therefore curable in a similar way.

Preserved by Stucco

Among the ruins of Mesopotamia, in buildings dating back probably from 3,000 to 3,500 years B. C., are to be found at the present time walls covered with stucco, which, in a measure, owe their preservation to its use.

ALCOHOL EVAPORATES

The water in a Ford cooling system does not circulate until it reaches a temperature of 188 degrees, alcohol boils at 162 degrees. When alcohol is used as an anti-freeze solution it is necessary to test it regularly to be insured against freezing the radiator. Chromine anti-freeze solution does not evaporate. When used in a Ford car you can forget about your radiator freezing and end your winter worries. Get your radiator filled before it is too late.

CONVENTIONS IN COLUMBUS DURING WEEK

Columbus — Theology, journalism and advertising shared the stage of public interest in Ohio Monday as representatives of the First and Fourth estates thronged the state capital.

Men of the cloth and leaders of the press arrived by the hundreds from all parts of Ohio for newspaper and church conventions.

Simultaneously by rail and motor hundreds of delegates were pouring in for the advertising conventions that also opened today.

Members of the three professions had little idle time on their hands as the following conventions were called to order.

The winter meeting of the advertising commission of the International Advertising association.

The Associated Ohio Dailies annual meeting.

The annual convention of the 5th District of International Advertising association.

Royal Expenses Cut Down

Smart Velvet Toques Adopt African Drap

Curiously draped toques are the fashion. Their crowns have height, slant back and develop a peak at the top. What is more, they are becoming—after you get used to wearing or seeing them. Most talked-of is the African drape, interpretations of which appear in this picture. Two-toned velvet effects, as shown in the top hat, are quite the rage at present. The all-black velvet toque, as shown here, is considered by some as one of the season's smartest millinery items.

Fascinating Things Are Shown in Informal Dress

Fascinating things are shown in informal dress—negligees, pajamas, boudoir coats, jackets and scarfs. The latest form of negligee is first of all a pajama suit of satin, crepe or some soft, silk Chinese material. It is shown in most lovely shades of blue, rose, yellow, green, orchid and deep violet, and some of the newest suits are trimmed in hands or piping of a contrasting color, usually vivid. These are gay in the Chinese brocades which seem especially well adapted for this type of garment.

Over the pajamas is worn a full length or three-quarters open coat of georgette or chiffon, bordered with marabout or fur, and held close about the hips with a sash of the material to be tied in a large bow at one side. Superbly scarfs and shawls of silk, heavily embroidered and fringed, lame of the laciest quality and chiffon velvet brocade, are to be worn and evening wraps in the season's latest styles are beautiful in color and in fabric. The wrap de luxe is one of ermine trimmed with tails of white fox and lined with chiffon velvet or lame. All of the latest styles in footwear are included in the trousseau—the elaborate jeweled and embroidered evening slippers, the reptile and suede shoes for daytime, and the dainty mules of satin, gilt and silver trimmed with ostrich, lace and flowers.

Velvet Reefer Is Smart for the Winter Season

A little velvet reefer is included in every smart collection for the winter season. It generally is bound with silk braid and worn with a plain or platted skirt of checked or striped material.

There is the "castiglione" reefer which is rather short, not passing beyond the hips, with pagoda sleeves, either entirely embroidered tone upon tone or in contrasting colors.

The most ordinary style is fashioned like that of a man's jacket, double-breasted, squarely cut with four buttons, or it may have rounded fronts and long, narrow, curving lapels.

Then there is the Algerian reefer covered with embroidery and decorated with little shoulder ornaments falling over the top of the arm. A delightful frock in Havana colored crepe de chine has one of these bolero reefer bordered with tiger fur.

These short velvet coats are comfortable and becoming. They often are bordered with silk braid and every color under the sun is used for them. They look almost as well when worn with a silk frock as with a smart tailored skirt. Golden browns and blacks are probably the most popular for the skirts.

Frocks for Dances

Tulle frocks, while not so practical as those of chiffon, are exquisite. In the wardrobe of a girl who has just gone back to school is a delightful little frock, which has a skirt composed of alternate flounces of black and white tulle. The waist is of white taffeta.

Velvet Jackets

A mode which is both smart and practical is the tailored velvet jacket which is worn with a sport skirt of platted plaid woolen cloth, black and white in broken checks or plaids being one of the favorites.

AMUSEMENTS

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's first custom-made western proves to be something new in that type of drama.

When it was announced some months ago that M-G-M would invade the western field with a new class of blood stirring drama and a new western star there were many who thought the finished article would be a repetition of the ordinary.

"War Paint," starring Colonel Tim McCoy, at the Metropolitan theater, proves to be a revelation in that class of drama.

In fact, it is about the first time the writer has seen an Indian story handled with any considerable degree of intelligence and the only time I can recall when the Indian is given the consideration due his race.

The organization producing this picture did a wise thing when it went to the great open spaces of Wyoming and selected a male star who had never faced the camera before.

Col. Tim McCoy, product of the plains and mountains of the Great West, is a romantic looking figure who plainly shows he has not been touched with egotism which so often goes with the appearance of professional screen artists.

McCoy looks like the West and he acts the West with a naturalness and frankness that will surely make him a favorite with picture goers. He goes about the business of acting the same as he would go about the business of ranching in Wyoming, where he has large ranch holdings.

Director W. S. Van Dyke has used real Indians, thruout the picture and many of them prove to be excellent screen artists.

Pauline Starke, who plays the leading feminine role, the daughter of the commandant of a western fort in the eighties, gives a wonderful performance as does Karl Dane in the role of drunken and lovable Sergeant Major Clancy.

WE PRINT THE NEWS

Beauty of the Morning

Have you knowledge of the morning? Do you sympathize with that season of nature? Are you abroad early, brushing the dew aside? If the sun rises on you slumbering, if you do not hear the morning cock crow, if you do not witness the blushes of Aurora, if you are not acquainted with Venus as the morning star, what relation have you to wisdom and purity? You have then forgotten your Creator in the days of your youth.—Thoreau.

Injurious Drugs

Hashish is the name of a drug prepared from gum obtained from a plant known as Indian hemp. It is a powerful narcotic and is smoked extensively by the Arabs. Its effects are very similar to those produced by the use of opium. In India a highly intoxicating drink called bhang, is made from hashish. Its use is very injurious to mind and body.

Second Growth of Trees

The bureau of plant industry says that a second growth late in the season is a frequent occurrence with the cherry and the plum tree after a continuous dry spell. This second blooming may also indicate a diseased condition of the tree. If this has occurred only on one tree, it is indicative of a diseased condition, while if it is prevalent throughout the entire orchard, it is a result of weather conditions.

YEW TREE FROM VIRGINIA IS TAKEN TO WASHINGTON

Experts Engaged for More Than Week in Digging Roots and Arranging for Removal.

Richmond, Va.—A beautiful yew tree owned by Clarence Hicks of Port Royal, Va., has been bought for $1,000 by the St. Albans guild of Washington and is being taken to Washington to be planted on the grounds of the National cathedral where President Woodrow Wilson is buried. The tree is a very fine specimen of the variety known as Irish yew—a shrub with the pyramidal or columnar habit of the cypress, the branches are mostly vertical, of dense growth and dark foliage. It measures 20 feet in height and 30 feet in circumference.

The removal of the tree has been no simple task. For more than a week experts have been engaged in the work, digging a great hole 40 feet in circumference and removing the roots of the tree with a huge ball of earth around them. A compact wooden frame was then built around the ball to hold the earth to the roots.

A cable was fastened around the framework surrounding the roots of the tree and the other end was attached to a heavy truck. The tree was pulled out of the hole by the truck, then along 50 feet of road and onto a trailer attached to a large truck by which the tree is being transported to Washington.

The picturesque little town of Port Royal was laid out in 1744 on the banks of the Rappahannock and possesses much of the charm of an old world village. Here life is peaceful and unhurried, it has escaped the rush of the highway, for the Tidewater trail passes half a mile from the town.

As one loiters along the grassy streets under ancient sycamores and mulberry trees and observes the quaint houses covered with moss grown shingles, the old gardens with their box bordered paths, one feels transported back over more than a hundred years and can picture the time when Port Royal was really a royal port, and the boats from England came up the Rappahannock as far as Falmouth, above Fredericksburg.

She Makes $175 a Week; Supports Family of 18

New York.—Mrs. Cornelius Bolster, forty years old and cheerful, is making a success of one of the hardest jobs in New York—the running of a family of 18 on a combined family income of $175 a week.

The secret, she says, is system. She runs her home in West Two Hundred and Twenty-eighth street like a hotel, with work, meals and sleep regulated like clockwork and a budget to care for the last penny.

The 16 children range in ages from one to twenty-two, with five of the older children helping their father to meet the family budget.

Mrs. Bolster's weekly budget calls for expenses of $130, enabling her to save something each week. Food costs the family $70 a week and some of the items are: Twelve loaves of bread a day for $1; 10 quarts of milk, $1.10; 6 to 8 pounds of meat, $4; 5 pounds of butter, $3; rent $37 a month.

What are the musical preferences of young America? According to their own statements, 1746 high school boys and girls of Denver, Colorado, know exactly the sort of music they like best and were not slow to make their preferences known to J. C. Kendal, director of music in the Denver public schools. Orchestra music was selected by 27% of these as affording the greatest pleasure, while youthful thumbs turned up for band music to the tune of twenty per cent.

To an equal number of students, music spells dance music, either direct, "canned" or via radio. While this is usually orchestra music under another name, their choice gives some idea of the type of composition which this fifth prefers.

Instrumental music, either as soloists or trios, as differentiated from large bands and orchestras, received 19 per cent or almost another fifth in the musical balloting, while vocal music makes the least appeal and was the selection of the remaining fourteen per cent.

Two other interesting sidelights on this situation are pointed out by the Conn Music Center as being significant of the growth of music among the youth of the country. One is that of these 1,746 students, 623 are studying music under private instructors and 239 expect to make music their life work.

The other is that 3,292 musical instruments were brought to light in the families of these pupils and that in over sixty homes a definite musical organization was flourishing, such as trio, quartet or even small band. An eleven-piece orchestra was mentioned in one home as the band which keeps the family round the hearth at night.

No. 2—God's Most Neglected People.

Mental Sickness Is Only Form of Illness That Finds Its Way to the Criminal Docket

Editor's Note—This is the eighth of a series of articles that will appear each week in this newspaper dealing with Ohio's problem of increasing insanity. These articles are sponsored by the Ohio Association for the Welfare of the Mentally Sick, which has but one objective, namely, more scientific and more humane treatment of mentally sick patients in state hospitals and the rapid rehabilitation of these unfortunates.

The only type of sickness that is handled on the criminal docket of the police court is mental sickness. The man or woman ill of pneumonia or appendicitis does not have to go to jail first and then to the hospital. Only those having a mental illness are so mistreated.

The average sheriff is a very nice fellow, but what does he know about mentally sick people? The reaction of the average sheriff on his maiden trip to "arrest" a so-called "lunatic" would be laughable if it were not so pathetic. He usually surrounds himself with a half-dozen armed deputies and starts after his man. It is a wonder that more patients don't start a roughhouse on seeing such a posse coming to his door.

THE "CRIME OF LUNACY."

In due course of time the sheriff is commanded by the probate court to produce his prisoner. The stage is set, the august judge occupies the bench, the complaining witness is ready, the medical witnesses are there, and all sides are properly greased. The court crier calls out his "Hear ye, hear ye" and the hand-me-down lunacy procedure of the dark ages begins.

The mentally sick, brain-hazy, bewildered patient is brought in with hand-cuffs to answer to the "crime of lunacy."

The patient is questioned very minutely on such grave matters as his age, his name and previous place of residence. The evidence submitted by the complaining witness is used as the testimony of the physicians, the medical blank is filled out, signed and the fee collected all in so short a time as ten minutes. A court stenographer does the rest.

WITHOUT A FRIEND.

The patient wonders what it is all about. After he recovers from his mental illness he usually has a rather hazy recollection of being in court, in the presence of strangers without a single friend to protect him. In that ten minutes a citizen who was temporarily delirious and mentally incapable of fighting his own battles was pounced upon by a criminal court procedure and labeled "lunatic."

The people of Ohio have been permitting this outrage to continue for years. The commitment law of Ohio is one of the loosest and flimsiest of all laws. Anyone, no matter who he is, can be committed as a "lunatic" through such archaic procedure. Under such a system what chance has the poor defenseless patient?

One of the many objects of the Ohio Association for the Welfare of the Mentally Sick is to write a new and better commitment law for the state. No patient ever should be subjected to the jail or probate court experience. Other and better ways can be devised. Your membership in the association will throw your moral support behind this movement. (To Be Continued Next Week)

GHOST STORIES RECALL PIONEER

Trails Blazed by Solomon Jones Serve Modern Motor Tourists.

Hendersonville, N. C.—When a group of children returning from a party in this picturesque mountain town late one night recently, told a story of seeing a towering man, with long, flowing hair, beating through the brush in the vicinity of Mount Hebron, following a great razor-backed sow, whose tail he held in his left hand, while with his right hand he swung an ax from side to side, parents were not unduly alarmed.

To the parents of one of the children, natives of the Hendersonville section of the Blue Ridge country, "the ghost with the ax" recalled the story of Solomon Jones. Interrogation of the returned youthful explorers revealed that the story of the mountain patriarch and the sow had been one of several related at the party during the evening, and that the "apparition" was the development of juvenile imagination.

While there are few people superstitious enough to believe that Solomon Jones' ghost haunts Mount Hebron, every old-timer in the section will agree that the spirit of the rugged mountaineer, who lived to near the century mark, is everywhere manifest in the great modern hard-surfaced highways radiating through the mountains in every direction. For Solomon Jones possesses the distinction of being the first American scenic road builder whose pursuit was so recognized. Tradition holds that his razor-backed sow, Sue, was his chief engineer.

His Winding Roads.

To those who like to romance of the past, Solomon Jones is referred to as the "trail blazer." His trails of yesteryear are a state's great highways of today, and the slashing of his hatchet reverberates today through mountain gaps in the pounding of road-making machinery.

Whether it is true that when about to build a road, Solomon Jones gripped his razor-backed sow, Sue, by the tail and followed her over the mountains, hacking a trail as he went, will always be a matter of dispute before mountain firesides, but noted surveyors and civil engineers who have visited Henderson county have marveled at the fact that old Solomon's roads followed the lowest grades and found the natural gaps through the mountains, which accounts for their continuous winding—sometimes almost like a spiral stairway in their regularity.

Although Solomon Jones blazed trails as far back as the days shortly following the War of 1812 while he was still in his teens, it was about fifty years ago that he completed his first scenic road. This is the road to the lofty summit of Mount Hebron—to the tomb of the old mountaineer. It was the most popular drive taken by residents of Hendersonville and visitors in the days of horse-drawn vehicles. Automobiles even today make the summit over this road, but most of the motorists, excepting those aspiring toward hazards, prefer to stay on the wider hard-surfaced highways, the outgrowth of Solomon's idea. Among the many other roads built by Solomon Jones was Jones' Gap, named for him, which leads to Caesar's Head in the Carolinas. This was constructed long before the Civil war and for more than sixty years was used by Jones and his heirs as a toll road.

Father of Twelve Children.

The road-maker was well termed the "grand old man of the mountains." He was, indeed, a patriarch. Standing six feet two inches tall and weighing 200 pounds and gifted with keen intellect, he was a man who commanded the respect of all who knew him. The father of twelve children, ten sons and two daughters, he was credited with adopting and bringing up seven other orphan children left to his care. He was ninety-seven years of age when death claimed him.

Solomon Jones, because of his large family, which he wished see well educated, turned naturally to schools. He was one of the pioneers in educational work, stumping western North Carolina in an effort to get the present public school system established. He thus early recognized the fact that if the mountain farmer was to improve his condition, it would be through the combination of good schools and roads.

Porcupine and Magpie Ruin Wyoming Crops

Cheyenne, Wyo.—The porcupine and the magpie have been playing havoc in Wyoming.

The winter food of porcupines is largely the bark and cambium layers of trees. The trees often are girdled and Albert M. Day, state leader of rodent control, says dead trees are evidence of the damage in all the forests. On a ranch in Campbell county the porcupines have damaged the timber and killed nearly all of the native wild fruits. Poison is placed in their dens.

The magpie not only robs the nests of other birds and kills young chickens and turkeys, but pecks holes in the hides of cattle and sheep. Approximately 1,500 pounds of poisoned ground beef has been used this year in getting rid of the bird.

STOCKHOLDERS

Of Ford Motors Co. Case Before Federal Court Brought Out Peculiar Testimony.

Detroit, Jan. 21.—Disputes between high officials of the Ford Motor company about building policies were revealed today at the hearing of the government's $34,000,000 tax suit against Senator James Couzens and other former stockholders.

Edward Gray, who from 1909 to 1915, was Ford's construction engineer, told how plans prepared by him for assembly plants in Canada and Chicago, and other new buildings had been taken from him by Ford and handed to Albert Kahn.

"I felt hurt," Gray said, explaining a scene in Ford's office on April 18, 1913, when Kahn was told to proceed with plans already started by Gray.

"Later several technical magazines published article about new construction ideas carried out in these buildings and I was not given credit for originating them."

Brought Down to Date

Charles Dickens said: "Have a heart that never hardens, a temper that never tires and a touch that never hurts." "Dear, dear!" exclaims a cynical reader of the above, "what a different advice he would give today: 'Have a liver that never hardens, a tire that never punctures and a touch that never fails to land something.'"—Boston Transcript.

Much Sugar in Corn

In a bushel of corn there are approximately 34 pounds of starch, and depending upon what the market demands the amount of sugar extracted from this starch varies from a few pounds to all of the 34. In actual commercial practice only 8 or 10 pounds of sugar are taken out of the average bushel of corn today, but the entire 34 pounds of starch could be converted into sugar if necessary.

RITES OF MARRIAGE CHANGED BY CHURCH

House of Bishops in England Remodel Service in Prayer Book; Protests Made.

London, Jan. 21.—The marriage service in the Episcopal book of common prayer has been completely remodeled, the Church of England says today in giving an authoritative, although unofficial, resume of changes made as a result of the deliberations of the house of bishops on prayer book revisions.

The bishops were unanimous in their decisions, it is said.

"We believe that the revision will generally be approved by churchmen of all schools of thought except those irreconcilably opposed to any change," the paper says, "for those the present book of common prayer will still be available."

A score of clergymen and about 100 laymen and laywomen marched with banners Jan. 12 to Lambeth Palace, where the house of bishops was in session, in protest against the possibility of revising the book of common prayer by introducing ceremonies similar to those of the Roman Catholic church. One of the banners carried by the marchers said: "Alteration may wipe out the work of the reformation."

Straight Coat Is Popular in Paris

Variety Is Supplied by Use of Furs, Patch Decoration, Stitching.

The straightline coat, given variety by contrasting inset pieces, by tuck stitching, by patch decoration of fur and other novel ways of trimming, is generally accepted as the foundation of the Paris mode in new coats, says a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Times. Other patterns are shown, of course. The bloused-back model is very chic; the coat with fitted waist and full skirt is shown frequently; even the cape coat has its devotees among the couturiers. But the straight coat, with perhaps a barely perceptible flare, is the one most in favor.

For one thing, a straight-line coat affords an admirable surface for applying an infinite number of different trimming ideas, as the French designers have not been slow to recognize. "Patchwork," consisting of inset patterns as patiently and tediously pieced together as was ever the patchwork of our grandmothers, is a favorite method of enhancing the beauty of these new garments. Patou has employed it on a bottle-green coat in the new zibikasha, boasting one of the popular and graceful, full-length tuxedo collars that seem destined for a great vogue this season. This roll collar is of beaver, though the coat itself was lined in chipmunk. Linings of short-haired furs are being called upon to supply the necessary warmth that give fur coats their vogue. The patchwork on this coat consists of a border of rather large, diamond-shaped insets of velvet in a deep grape-purple shade, set in on the lower skirt and on the sleeves above the beaver cuffs.

Applied strappings afford many original trimming arrangements on these straight-line coats. Jeanne Lanvin has completely covered the shoulders of a straight coat in beige kasha with one-inch strappings of kasha in a darker shade. These straps run from the shoulders, two-thirds the coat length, where they terminate squarely, but are so gauged in length that they form a V on both the back and front of the coat. The full-length tuxedo collar serves on this coat also, this time being made of light brown astrakhan.

Another coat in dregs of wine kasha, cut more characteristically of the Lanvin collection, savors of the Russian influence that she is enthusiastic about just now. This coat had a huge draped Russian collar of glaze leather matching as nearly as possible the color of the coat. A row of large buttons fastens the coat neatly from hem to neck on the left side, and one of Lanvin's amusing round, accordion pouch pockets, nearly twelve inches across, focuses attention on the right side of the coat. The flaring cuffs and the trimming on the pocket are of leather.

Sometimes the lining of the coat is merely the go-between uniting two entirely dissimilar fabrics as it does in an ensemble.

Stoles Are Smart

Nothing is smarter for moderate weather with a tailored suit than a long fur stole. Many of the smartest are made of two or even three fox pelts, but with only one head and tail mounted on them. Gray astrakhan is emphasized as a popular fur for winter and some cloth coats have the entire sleeves made of the gray fur reproduced in each of the accessories.

Tricolor Outfits

Three-color combinations in costumes are a feature of the vogue. While some are worked out in one tone, such as black, trimmed with three other colors, there are many other interesting devices for expressing the three-color fashion.

Passing of Community Singing Loss to World

"What has happened to community singing, which did its part in winning the war and afterward made life merrier for age as well as youth?" asks the Independent, Boston. There is a dearth of it now, and even when one finds it the old gusto is gone and the listless choruses drag through to a drooping end. This ought not to be. There is much more than a social heart warming in popular song, important as that may be in our conglomerate country. The individual's own stimulus is most important of all, for he ought to "go forth to life" with spirit and power.

One cannot listen in church, which ought to be the greatest place for community song, without wondering why the gift has fallen into disuse. People mechanically go through the form of opening their hymn books and rising, and then seem abashed into silence by the sound of their own voices.

Love and the Coroner

Few "Wild" Horses

As a wild animal, the horse is found only in the open arid or desert plains of Central Asia and Africa. Those found in North and South America and Australia are not true wild horses. The mustangs and broncos of our West and of South America are domesticated animals that have run wild, or those descended from them.

De Laval Oil

Don't experiment with various kinds of oil to lubricate your De Laval Separator. There is just one brand of oil which is exactly suited to the purpose, and hundreds of brands which will not do at all.

Keep the oil cup of your separator filled with De Laval oil and you will get the utmost in separator satisfaction. The machine will turn easier, and give longer and better service.

All light, high-speed machines run better when lubricated with De Laval oil. It gives them the protection they need and is, therefore, the cheapest oil in the end.

Skidding on the Ice

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

IT LOOKED as if all the young people in Cedar Rapids had decided to go skating on the old slough. The air was crisp and cold and the skaters had to keep moving in order to be comfortable.

"What would be the chance of building a big fire and having a round or two of hot dogs?" suggested Harry Smith as he joined a group of his friends who were inspecting an interesting and dangerous air hole in the ice.

"You've said a bookful, kid," cried his chum, Ned Tisdale.

"Fetch on the dogs. We'll build the fire," sang out another.

And then began a merry race to the woods' edge of the ice, where they all knew there would be plenty of firewood.

Standing to one side of the laughing group of young people had been a slender, thoughtful girl. She had been skating alone, and now that they had gone she felt indeed a stranger in a strange land.

She had arrived only that morning to visit her grandparents in a little suburb of Cedar Rapids that had been nicknamed Seldom Seen in its early and unbecoming days. The old couple did not know very many young people, but they had assured Dorothy, when she had said she wanted to go skating that she would meet lots of "boys and girls" on the ice.

Dorothy was a good skater and, naturally, enjoyed the sport. She circled round and round the treacherous air holes and was the prettiest girl on the ice. She had come from Omaha, where the skating was good for several weeks each winter and she had learned many pretty figures as the new ice dances had come on.

She was thoroughly enjoying the good ice again and had skated over to the far end of the slough where the main road leads off to the town. So intent was she on a difficult stunt she was attempting in this remote bit of clearing that she did not see Harry Smith approaching with his arms full of packages.

"Oh, I'm so terribly sorry!" she exclaimed as she skidded backwards into him and knocked him down, scattering strings of sausage in every direction.

Harry recovered himself quickly and the two stood laughing into each others' eyes.

"I was wondering whether I could make it. I had too big a load," he explained.

"But it was all my fault—so stupid," insisted Dorothy, picking up the funny-looking sausage strings and trying to gather them into the bag.

"The rolls did not get messed up much," muttered Harry as he pushed them into a package.

"Wouldn't you let me help you carry them to their destination, perhaps?" asked Dorothy without ulterior motive.

"On one condition—that you join our crowd and help to cook and eat them," he said.

"All right—I'm game," said Dorothy, hugging a bag of rolls and a jar of mustard close to her bright-blue jersey.

"Are you—but of course you are—a stranger in Cedar Rapids?"

Dorothy admitted the charge. "I won't tell you my name. It wouldn't be proper. You must get some of the girls in your crowd—I saw them all when you planned this party—to introduce us or grandma and grandpa would have a fit," she fibbed glibly. Hadn't the dear old unsophisticated folks told her she would find plenty of children to skate with?

When the crowd saw Harry approaching with his lovely assistant there were many hasty and veiled remarks.

"Well, Harry," said Bob Tisdale, "I thought you said you were going to the butcher's not to the beauty shop."

Harry ignored this and called a girl friend to him. It did not take Dorothy long to explain who she was, and of course they all knew her grandparents. In less than five minutes she had been introduced to the hungry young people dancing about the big blazing fire.

Before Dorothy left late that afternoon she had been invited to a number of parties that were being given by members of the crowd she had been so informally dragged into.

"And here and now," said Harry Smith, "I invite you all to a moonlight skating party and barbecue. I don't know the date for I don't keep track of the moon, but I'll let you know."

Her ladyship, the moon, proved not to be bright enough for two more weeks, and by that time Harry had made inroads into the affections of Dorothy Howard. Even her simple grandparents began to surmise that the young people were more than mere "boys and girls." He tried to wait longer to tell her that he loved her, but as she was returning home on the following day he found it necessary to whisper on the ice the night of the party.

"But—we hardly know each other," protested Dorothy.

He overcame every argument, and when they all drank coffee from tin cups around the big fire the two almost told what had happened to them.

They did not need to say in so many words that they had fallen completely in love or that before many months Dorothy would return to Cedar Rapids to live among them.
